Today was my first day working on construction after working with 90 wonderful kids last week. I miss them already, but today at the work site 4 of them happened to be there and it made my day seeing them with their bright smile as always. And of course they wanted their daily piggy back ride, haha. In the morning at construction we put the floor down for a house that was very close to completion. My first experience with concrete was a success! The crew finished the floor before lunch time so we journeyed through the woods to the next site where we will work for the reminder on the week. On that journey was a creek crossing, the ultimate Guatemalan experience. At the site we mixed concrete so that the walls could be started today. Re-bars were also constructed by a portion of the group while the others assisted with the concrete for the walls to be started. There is still much work to be done on the house and the crew and I are excited to see what else we are able to accomplish before we return in a couple days. See you soon, hasta luego!

Today was my first full day at VBS at where I got to stretch out my legs and run around with all the kids playing soccer and the occasional two minutes of basketball before going back to soccer. I had a ton of fun running around with the kids and getting to know them. All the kids were great and made for two very quick sessions of VBS. Our first session of VBS got out a bit early today so we got to take a little tour around some of the village surrounding the PID clinic. We went to one house that was built by PID and belonged to one of their sponsored kids then got to visit the house of the lady that makes our lunches. We had the opportunity to make some of our own tortillas which was a bit so much so that the two girls actually making the tortillas had to fix just about all the ones that we tried to make. I am really looking forward to the rest of the week at VBS and I am excited to run around with these kids some more. See you guys in a couple days, adios!
